

ing to do this very thing next week. Most of the crop is so well advanced as to leave little to say it is made. The acreage is slightly above the normal, but the weight is far below. The weather conditions which arises not from the ravages of the worm—these are scarcely known this year. The germ of the plants seem stifled so that one plant will attain luxuriant growth while the next willmate will be scarcely showing any growth. The yield is about half dead. This year's crop of tobacco has not cost the raiser as much to work and worry as former crops.
